

The Secretary,
Regional Banking Taskforce

With the reduction of the number of bank branches in Australia, I think the time has arrived for the establishment of a post office bank. This will ensure rural and regional communities the continuation of banking facilities. A further advantage would be the availability of investment funds for desperately needed infrastructure. Current availability of funds is at the whim of big players such as Blackrock who can hold the country to ransom over their political ideologies.

C.S.Faulkner
M.I.E.Aust